My family and I wish to acknowledge Christine Wolfe who spent ample time going through and editing the manuscripts of all the selections. My confidence in publishing this little book rests heavily on your go-ahead approval. Indeed, the great distance between America and Asia is not at all anymore a hindrance.

I also thank Patrick Edwards from Chicago who made his initial comments on my first essay, Celebrate Life. Dude, big thanks for triggering the momentum for me to do the rest.

My heartfelt gratitude goes to my precious friend, Noli Vicedo, who put in valuable hours doing the front and back cover designs of this book. And by the way, Best Friend, thank you for your generous comments after reading the manuscript and later on giving the title itself—Picket Fence: A Personal Journey.

I want to acknowledge the objective—but sometimes subjective as well, and this is not a problem to me—comments of my wife Joy and my son John Gabriel on every essay they read. It inspired me when you cried, laughed, and even just sighed along the way when you read the drafts. You made it easier for me to rewrite, do initial proof-reading and editing. And Jonas Gildo, thank you for the mood swings. They added more color to our work.
